PROBLEMS

A Brief Story About The Problems

Many buildings and facilities face the problem of poorly maintained, unintegrated, and non-compliant fire protection systems. This situation increases the risk of asset damage, operational disruption, and even life-threatening situations during emergencies. The lack of regular inspections and slow technical response leave systems unready when needed.

- Fire protection systems are not installed in accordance with safety standards
- Fire system equipment is poorly maintained and not ready during emergencies
- Lack of regular inspection and preventive maintenance
- Slow response in handling faults or system failures
- No monitoring system for alarm status and fire zones
- Outdated installations that are no longer reliable
- High fire risk due to the absence of early detection
- Alarm, hydrant, and building monitoring systems are not integrated
- Difficulty complying with safety audits and regulatory requirements
- Shortage of qualified technical personnel with proper fire protection expertise
